

Dan M. Goodlin, Jr. testifies by affidavit in substance as follows:

“On Tuesday the 28th of April, 1914, I went in company with Charles Sigels, whom I had arrested on a warrant from the Municipal court of Atlanta, to the vicinity of Butler street and Fraser street. We went there to look for a man who had agreed to go on Sigels’ bond. We found the man we were looking for and all three of use stepped into a blacksmith’s shop to fix up the bond. Just as I came out I saw a young negro boy by the nickname of “Peavine”, - and he said ‘You scared me; I thought you wus comin’ after me.’ And then I said: ‘Where do you live?’ He pointed to where he lived. I then said ‘Well, I’ll know where to come when I want you.’ George Wrenn had been standing nearby, in front of Peavine’s house. Just then he came up to me and asked me something about how the sheriff’s race was coming. About that time Bass Rosser walked up. There was no conversation at all between myself and George Wrenn or Peavine about the Frank case or anything connected with it. We just had a few causal words conversation.”